NC SUES JUSTICE DEPT. OVER TRANSGENDER 'BATHROOM LAW'

1 North Carolina officials sued the U.S. Justice Department on Monday for challenging the state's law on public restroom access, in the newest chapter of the fight over the rights of transgender Americans. North Carolina Gov. Pat McCrory, a Republican, and the state's secretary of public safety accused the agency of "baseless and blatant overreach." In March, North Carolina became the first state in the country to require transgender people to use restrooms in public buildings and schools that match the sex on their birth certificate instead of one that matches their gender identity. ## ESCAPED CONVICT CAUGHT ON DAY 7 OF NEW JERSEY MANHUNT

2 After a weeklong manhunt, an escapee from a prison unit of a New Jersey psychiatric hospital was taken into custody on Monday in the state's desolate Pine Barrens wilderness. Arthur Buckel, 38, was under arrest in a forested area west of the Garden State Parkway near Lacey Township on the edge of the Pine Barrens, said New Jersey State Police and the Ocean County Sheriff's Office. "They got him in the woods," said a spokesman for the Ocean County Sheriff's Office, which tweeted a photograph of Buckel with his wrists handcuffed behind him surrounded by uniformed law enforcement officers. Buckel was two weeks away from parole when he disappeared on Tuesday from a minimum security unit at Ancora Psychiatric Hospital in Hammonton, about 50 miles southwest of Lacey Township.

FCC, FTC LAUNCH INQUIRY INTO MOBILE DEVICE SECURITY

3 The U.S. Federal Communications Commission and Federal Trade Commission on Monday jointly sent letters to mobile carriers including AT&T Inc, Sprint Corp, Verizon Communications Inc and others asking questions about how they release security updates in the wake of growing questions about security vulnerabilities, the agencies said. The FTC also said Monday it ordered eight mobile device manufacturers to provide information about how they issue security updates to address vulnerabilities in smartphones, tablets and other mobile devices.

School activities resumed at Tufts University Monday after a bomb threat and car fire led to a sweeping investigation at the college's Medford/Somerville campus.

In a notice sent around 1:45 p.m., students were advised they could walk freely around campus again, and that evening exams would be held as planned. Earlier, students had been advised to stay indoors and exams earlier in the day had been canceled.

Extra police were patrolling the school Monday "for the peace of mind of the community," the update read. It added, "Thank you for your cooperation and patience during this very unusual and challenging day."

Around 4:30 a.m. a Tufts University employee's car was discovered burning near the school's health center.

Near the blaze, investigators found taped to the health center's door a threatening note which referenced an ongoing labor dispute between the university and custodial staff, according to The Boston Globe.

Crews hauled away the burned-out car from its spot at 124 Professors Row on Monday afternoon. Photos taken early that morning show flames bursting out of the vehicle's interior.

Groups involved in the contentious labor situation — the custodial workers' union, the on-campus group Tufts Labor Coalition — have claimed no involvement in the car fire and have condemned the incident.

Speaking with reporters Monday morning, Mary Jeka, senior vice president for university relations, said "it is not at all clear" that the dispute was the motivation for the fire and threatening note.

Authorities had evacuated and searched Cabot Hall, Braker Hall, Cohen Hall, the Health Services building, the Tisch Library and the Tisch Sports Complex after the discovery of the threat.

The school said in an update on its website that "multiple law enforcement agencies" were investigating.

Counseling services were being made available to students and faculty, and students who felt they could not take their exams Monday night were asked to contact a doctor, a counselor or an academic dean.

Green Line extension to move forward pending federal review

The extension of the MBTA's Green Line through Somerville and Medford will move forward, pending a federal review, after a vote of approval from top transit officials on Monday.

Members of the boards who oversee the MBTA and MassDOT voted unanimously to submit its new stripped-down plans for the project to the Federal Transit Administration. At the same time, the T will begin drafting a plan to staff the project and finance it.

The joint meeting — packed with a standing-room-only crowd — came after the project was upended by news last year that the 4.5-mile-long project would cost about $1 billion more than the $2 billion officials had budgeted for it.

Since then, the T has been working on simplifying the plans. Now, $622 million has been cut from the price tag, which puts the new cost at about $2.28 billion, according to the State House News Service.

There are caveats: The $2.3 billion doesn't include the cost of financing the project, which has previously been pegged at $300 million. The FTA could also turn down the plans, or the federal review could result in the budget being increased.

And there is still no guarantee the project will be built; the state can still cancel it in the future, officials said.

As for what the new plans cut out, stations will be less substantial than the ones drawn up in previous plans: simple outdoor sheltered platforms, rather than fully enclosed train stations.

A bike and walking path that was part of the original plans has also been shortened and the size of a new MBTA maintenance facility reduced. Unchanged are the locations of the seven new stations proposed for the Green Line.

There is a lot of pressure to see the project completed, including the nearly $1 billion in federal funding earmarked for the GLX, which will evaporate if the T doesn't act. The T has also already dumped hundreds of millions of dollars into the project.

Cambridge and Somerville last week pledged to pay $75 million toward the extension. SPENCER BUELL

Ferguson swears in black police chief

Racial makeup of city police department has been a source of controversy because most officers are white, while two-thirds of residents are African-American.

Ferguson, Missouri, the site of violent protests after a white officer shot and killed an unarmed black teenager in 2014, on Monday swore in an African-American police chief who said his focus is on making the community safer, not more profitable.

"Government is not designed to make a profit," said Delrish Moss, a 51-year-old veteran of the Miami Police Department, referring to past Justice Department complaints of aggressive ticketing of African-Americans by the police to boost city funds through fines. "Ferguson knows now that that is not the way to do things."

His swearing in comes less than three weeks after a federal judge approved an agreement to reform Ferguson's police department and municipal law code. The reforms are intended to fix what the Justice Department has called widespread racial bias in the city's police department.

Moss, ahead of his installation, said his experience in Miami has been a training ground for Ferguson, and his goal is to make the community safer.

The Justice Department initiated a civil-rights investigation into Ferguson's policing after Michael Brown, 18, was shot and killed by a white officer in 2014.

Moss, who in his 32 years in Miami worked patrol, undercover assignments and homicide investigations, previously said Ferguson's police department needed a massive recruiting drive to become more reflective of the community. Moss most recently was supervisor of Miami Police Department's public information and community relations.

He is at least Ferguson's third police chief since Brown's death. Ferguson erupted into violent protests after a grand jury chose not to indict the white officer, Darren Wilson. REUTERS

RACE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE

Trump picks Christie to head transition team

Christie endorsed Trump after dropping out of the 2016 Republican primary race in February and has been campaigning with the New York billionaire.

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump said on Monday he has chosen New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, a rival turned ally, to lead his White House transition team as he prepares for the general election campaign.

"Governor Christie is an extremely knowledgeable and loyal person with the tools and resources to put together an unparalleled Transition Team, one that will be prepared to take over the White House when we win in November," Trump said in a statement.

Trump, the presumptive Republican nominee in the Nov. 8 presidential election, said Christie will oversee an "extensive team."

Trump's campaign said the candidate was moving into a general election mode and "implementing an infrastructure capable of securing a victory including making key hires, building a finance operation to benefit the Republican Party and unifying the party by working with several Republican leaders now voicing their support for Mr. Trump and his candidacy."

Bieber's got ink on his face

They grow up so fast. Justin Bieber has passed a milestone on his way to being the absolute worst: He got a face tattoo. But don't worry — it's tiny and rather silly looking. Yes, Bieber managed to do something utterly ridiculous but still in a failure-tastic way. That's our boy. "Justin came in last night and decided on a small cross near the corner of his eye," the tattoo artist, named a "Waltons"-esque Jon-boy, tells Us Weekly. "It represents his journey in finding purpose with God." Really? Because it looks like he's the wimpiest inductee in a prison gang. This move marks a significant change in Bieber's stance on face tattoos from earlier this year — and yes, for those keeping track, it's only May — when he told GQ magazine that he'd only get one when he's "really old. Not superold, but maybe, like, 40s or 50s or something," he said. "I think if they're done right, they could be cool, but nothing crazy all over the face." Well, we'll see how he feels — and how his face looks — in another three months.

Johnny Depp makes light of the War on Terrier

Now that Amber Heard and Johnny Depp have been punished for their whole smuggling teacup Yorkies into Australia on a private jet thing — and released a painfully stilted apology video about it — the "Pirates of the Caribbean" star apparently thinks it's time to go ahead and make light of the whole ordeal. Because why not? It's all behind us, right? While in London to promote his new film, "Alice Through the Looking Glass," Depp couldn't help but make a quip about the whole mess, telling press in faux-seriousness that he "would really like to apologize for not smuggling my dogs into England because it would've been a bad thing to do" during a press conference. "I'm going to do this everywhere I go." Is it me, or is he not really taking this whole thing seriously?

Rob Kardashian gives Blac Chyna a Mother's Day salute

Let's just call this yet another example of how Rob Kardashian has no patience whatsoever. The lone male Kardashian sister gave his pregnant fiancee, Blac Chyna, a bouquet of white roses for Mother's Day, Chyna revealed on her Instagram. And the dad-to-be gave her a tribute on his own Instagram account as well, so you know it's love. "Happy mamas day to this beautiful Mama, I fell in Love with her immediately because of how great of a mom she is and now I'm looking forward to starting a Family with her," he wrote. "Thank You Chy for everything you do for me." Kardashian's whirlwind romance with Chyna has seen dating, engagement and pregnancy announcements coming weeks apart from each other, and now he can't even wait until she's had the baby to celebrate her being a mom, which seems like it's against the rules of Mother's Day? Can't you just wait until next year? How silly of me, look who I'm asking.

Brie Larson is engaged

Man, Brie Larson's year just keeps getting better and better. Yes, she won an Oscar for her role in "Room," and yes she just got some good reviews for her inaugural hosting stint on "Saturday Night Live." But this is probably much more important to her: Larson is now engaged to her longtime boyfriend, Alex Greenwald, her rep confirms to E! News. Larson fans would be familiar with Alex because he popped up in all of her acceptance speeches during her successful awards-season run. At the Oscars, she even offered him the totally adorable, "I love you the whole thing."

Seratones rock onto the scene with Southern soul and spirit.

ILANA KAPLAN
@lanikapsk
letters@metro.us

While New Orleans is usually a go-to for music in Louisiana, there's been something brewing in Shreveport and it comes in the form of rock band Seratones.

Pure, titillating rock 'n' roll at its finest, the Southern four-piece sounds like what you'd get if Save Ferris, Black Sabbath and Aretha Franklin had a love child.

Fronted by powerhouse vocalist A.J. Haynes, the band — comprising Connor Davis, Adam Davis and Jesse Gabriel — creates music that makes you feel like you're at a carefree high school party. Formed in 2014, the band grew up together in charming Shreveport, where they have quite the musical history.

Seratones played in a lot of different bands together throughout the years, going from one project to the next.

CHAD KAMENSHINE

BIG ROCK FROM THE BAYOU

When they won a contest for their work at the renowned Blade Studios, the band was able to focus on new material — which eventually resulted in their debut album, "Get Gone."

"We were of the 'If you build it, they will come' mentality," says Haynes.

"We had been crafting the songs since [being in the studio]. Everything just took off from there."

It's not surprising that Seratones is such a fun band: That's the whole spirit of the Shreveport music scene. Seratones cite one of their favorite bands as a two-piece hip-hop group that raps about spaghetti. Everything is all in good fun in Shreveport.

Last week, Seratones released "Get Gone," which feels like one big rock roller-coaster ride — because that's what it's been like for the band. It's something that resulted in a record perfect for a rager. The band spent two weeks recording the music, but up until that point, they had been perfecting the heavy guitar work, drums and soaring vocals of the songs.

"Songs are living creatures: They're constantly changing, but we found that with the record we wanted to capture the live energy," says Haynes. "If you're making music and you're not having fun, then there's no point. So, we wanted [the album] to sound like a party."

There's a certain quality to the band that's reminiscent of the anthemic energy from Alabama Shakes. While the four piece's sound is more straight-up rock than blues-rock, there's a spirit about them and the revival of classic rock that breeds similarities. It could be the combination of the band being able to put on a good show and have a good time that makes them stand out.

Regardless of the reception of "Get Gone," the Seratones are focused on what they want to achieve when it comes down to it all.

"We want to tour the world, be successful and make good art," Haynes says. "So if there's a cult following for that, that's great. But our No. 1 prerogative is to make good music that we can be proud of. If we build it, they will come."

Just music, and nothing else

La Sera's Katy Goodman explains why less is more on her new album.

MATTHEW DINARO
@MetroNewYork
letters@metro.us

As long as indie-pop darlings the Vivian Girls were still active, bassist Katy Goodman's other band, La Sera, seemed relegated to side-project territory. But since the Vivians' official breakup in 2014, Goodman has expanded her ambitions. Her husband, guitarist Todd Wisenbaker, is now a full member and co-songwriter in La Sera, and friend Ryan Adams produced their latest record, "Music for Listening to Music To." We talked to Goodman about the record's amusing title and twangy resonance.

One thing I heard on a lot of songs on this album is a Smiths influence, which you've said was important on your last album as well. With you and Todd now writing the songs together, you seem to have a Morrissey-Marr thing going on.

This time around, we wanted to have less layers — guitar overdubs and stuff. So what Todd is playing in all the songs is very acrobatic and full, and very Marr-esque — nonstop guitar shredding. I think that's what makes the songs Smiths-y. It is a dance between the melody and the guitar.

I really liked the title of the record. Your press release said it basically just means "this is just music." Could you elaborate on that?

It's a play on old records — like, for example, the other day I found one on the Internet called "Music to Strip to Your Husband To." So we thought it'd be funny to have it just be like, "Music for music's sake." It's also specifically not music for licensing or music for commercials — because I feel like in this day and age, there are so many other reasons why there's so much music. And this is not for that. This was not made to be remixed — nothing against that, but this record is not for that. This record is just music recorded for music's sake.

The MCU's own Vision says "Captain America: Civil War" is about the real world — kind of.

 MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Paul Bettany doesn't have a deep history with comic books. After all, he's English. Not that comics are an exclusively American enterprise, but he wasn't all that versed in the art form before he signed up to voice J.A.R.V.I.S., Tony Stark's semi-sentient computer system, in the first "Iron Man."

"I had no idea how rich and complex this world was, and how intricate the relationships between the characters were," Bettany tells us. "It's been heartening to find out, because I spend a large part of my year being in these films."

Indeed, Bettany has returned again and again as J.A.R.V.I.S., appearing in so many movies that his character wound up evolving, in a sense. In "Avengers: Age of Ultron," he became Vision, the omnipotent being who joined with the other dogooder superheroes, as he does again in "Captain America: Civil War."

There's an increasing amount of intel to process, and Bettany says he'll frequently bug the filmmakers to explain the nitty-gritty. They also give him plenty of homework.

"We all — or maybe it's just me — get packages. Marvel and [producer] Kevin Feige sent me relevant comic books," Bettany says. He likes working for lifelong fans. "They know they're doing basically what they did as kids, but at a super high level. To me they are Yodas."

In "Civil War," Vision is grappling with his powers while being essentially a child.

"The fun bit is having to imagine just being born in the last movie," he says. "You get to imagine what it's like to have these superpowers and be omnipotent, and yet be totally naive."

This entry also puts him in the middle of a key debate: Should the Avengers have government oversight? Or should they be free to (hopefully) do good, albeit sometimes with collateral damage? (See: the super-sized climaxes of both "Avengers" films, which saw two separate cities nearly destroyed.)

"We're all living in the same world, and the world we're living in is very troubled," Bettany explains. "Usually these sorts of movies are pure escapism. It's interesting to have a movie that doesn't avoid those questions, that tackles those questions in a slightly altered universe. In this movie you see a group of super-powered human beings struggling with unilateral intervention, and whether there should be a regulating body governing that. Topical stuff."

Not that one can't watch these Marvel films while thinking about how horrible everything is in real life. It's sometimes easy to forget, given the relative sophistication and deep thought in many modern comic book movies, that they're also for the young. Naturally, Bettany's kids adore that their dad is a superhero.

"They love coming on set and seeing all the gadgets and the costumes. Maybe not so much my 18-year-old son," he says, referring to Kai, who his wife, fellow actor Jennifer Connelly, had from another relationship. "He's a little bit busy at Yale studying calculus. I hope it's not at the forefront of his reading material right now."

Arianna Huffington wants you to take a nap

The media mogul extols the health benefits of sleep in her new book.

A.D. AMOROSI
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

When most people hear the name "Arianna Huffington," they think columnist, they think co-founder and editor-in-chief of The Huffington Post, they think political animal. They don't think sleep.

Yet after a time of finding her health and overall effectiveness dinged by a lack of sleep, she took action — and, of course, wrote about it.

"The turning point was me collapsing [in 2007] from sleep deprivation and breaking my cheekbone," says Huffington. "That was my wake-up call. I then began to look around and realize that I, by no means, was the only one. Millions of people are suffering from burnout due to a lack of proper sleep. We live in a culture with a collective delusion that we need to be always on."

Our

Arianna Huffington
GETTY IMAGES

collective lack of shut-eye is actually making us less effective.

"Only by renewing our relationship with sleep can we take back control of our lives," says Huffington.

MAKE HEALTHY YOUR NEW HAPPY

that level of sleep? I don't like myself at those times. I find that I am crankier and more easily upset by things if I don't get proper rest. I'm not as creative or as good at problem solving. Most importantly, I don't have the same sort of joy of which I am blessed to have in my life.

Was it hard giving up artificial light during sleep time?

It was. Like so many of us, I have been addicted to my technology. Basically, what worked was having a little bit of discipline at the beginning in, say, disengaging from my computer. Thirty minutes before I turn out the light, then 15 minutes, then 5 minutes. What becomes a magnet is how you show up for your life the next morning.

One of the things you write smartly about in "Sleep Revolution" is the positive effect of cognitive behavioral therapy. I'm trying to base what I'm saying on science. We have the evidence that CBT is effective when it comes to sleep. Once you try all the alternatives like the warm bath, turning off all of your devices or reading in bed. If you still have trouble sleeping, CBT corrects what keeps us awake.

What should we take from "The Sleep Revolution"?

What I learned is that our culture needs to shift its way of thinking from the delusion that "we'll sleep when we're dead." We are paying too heavy a price with that in regards to our health, happiness and decision-making. Cultures believe a lot of false things — remember how we once thought smoking was OK for us? Sleeping is the new smoking — a genuine problem that we need to fix.

MLB power rankings | by Ryan Hannable

No. 1 Cubs (24-6)

The Cubs have won seven straight. Even if they played just .500 ball the rest of the season, they would still finish with 90 wins, which shows just how good their start has been.

No. 2 White Sox (22-10)

The White Sox have carried their hot start from April over to May as they have won three games in a row and have a five-game lead in the AL Central. Pitching has carried them thus far with Jose Quintana's 1.38 ERA being second in the AL and Chris Sale's 1.79 ERA the fourth best.

No. 3 Mets (19-11)

New York has won six of its last 10 games to jump to the top of the NL East. Matt Harvey seems to be turning a corner and Yoenis Cespedes is now swinging a hot bat. He has 11 home runs and 30 RBIs, second and first respectively in the NL.

No. 4 Nationals (19-12)

The Nationals were atop the NL East, but losing four straight games has taken them out of the top spot. Starter Tanner Roark is enjoying a great start to the year with a 2.03 ERA, good for fifth in the NL.

No. 5 Orioles (18-12)

Many picked the Orioles to finish in last place in the AL East, but they have flipped the script and are leading the division. Mark Trumbo has been one of the biggest surprises in the lineup as he's hit nine homers, which are second in the American League.

No. 6 Red Sox (18-13)

Although the Red Sox are five games over .500, there are still concerns. David Price and Clay Buchholz both have ERAs over 6.00, but the biggest surprise has been knuckleballer Steven Wright, who has allowed two runs or less in all six of his starts.

No. 7 Mariners (18-13)

Led by its offense, Seattle is atop the AL West standings just over a month into the season. As expected, Robinson Cano is leading the way with 12 home runs and 33 RBIs, both of which lead the American League.

No. 8 Rangers (18-14)

The Rangers have won three games in a row and are just behind the Mariners in the AL West. They don't have many superstars — besides Cole Hamels — but are playing solid complimentary baseball and it will be interesting to see how long it lasts.

Sons of Vegas

Las Vegas has been on the Pats' bandwagon for years and it's not stopping now. The oddsmakers at Bovada LV have the Patriots as Super Bowl favorites for this upcoming season. The Pats have 7/1 odds to win it all, followed by the Seahawks (8/1), Packers (10/1) and Steelers (10/1). GETTY IMAGES

Heath Hembree has been spectacular in the Red Sox' bullpen. GETTY IMAGES

Sox bullpen has been tremendous thus far

Boston has relied plenty on its bullpen in the early goings of 2016

RYAN HANNABLE
@RyanHannable
sports@metro.us

About a month into the 2016 season, there have been a lot of things that have gone right for the Red Sox — Hanley Ramirez's play at first base, Rick Porcello performing well on the mound, Xander Bogaerts' terrific defense at shortstop, among other things.

While those players have been great, the unsung heroes for the team this year have been their bullpen members. While their team ERA is 13th in baseball at 3.55, they've been much better than the numbers indicate, partly because of the number of innings they've been forced to throw. Overall, Red Sox relievers have thrown 99 innings, which is the 15th-most in the game, but they've played 30 games while some teams have played 32 and 33.

In 10 games this season Red Sox starters have pitched five innings or less, putting tremendous pressure on the bullpen, but they've actually thrived in these situations.

In fact, it earned Heath Hembree a spot in the Red Sox' bullpen. On the day he was called up from Triple-A Pawtucket, Joe Kelly left the game in the first inning with a shoulder injury and Hembree went 3 1/3 scoreless innings and showed enough that he was kept on the roster the next day when the team made some roster moves to get fresh arms from Pawtucket. Overall, in five outings he's gone 10 1/3 innings and has allowed only one run while striking out 11. He's been a pitcher John Farrell can count on for multi-inning stints.

Another pitcher who has made the most of long relief appearances is left-hander Robbie Ross Jr. In nine appearances totaling 13 innings, he's allowed four earned runs for a 2.77 ERA.

This isn't even mentioning the best pitchers in the bullpen in Junichi Tazawa, Koji Uehara, Carson Smith (who rejoined the team last week) and closer Craig Kimbrel. When everyone is healthy and in their accustomed roles, the Sox can truly say they have one of the best bullpens in baseball.

The state of the 'pen will also likely improve with starters going deeper into games. To this point, they have had 19 pitchers appear in games this season and it's only early May.

It's been a great start to the season for a number of different players in Boston, but the most underrated part of the season so far has been the performance of the bullpen. Without them, there's no question the team would not be where they are in the standings.

metro.us/horoscopes

Aries Emotional issues pertaining to your home and family will escalate if you bring about changes without getting approval first. A money matter is best handled delicately.

Taurus Solutions will be found if you discuss your concerns openly. Persuasive tactics will help you get your way. You will be offered the chance to travel or reunite with someone special.

Gemini Go over details carefully before moving forward with a project that someone is shoving on you. Your talent and skill will be in demand, so pick and choose carefully.

Cancer Don't make impulsive moves. If you plan your actions, you will stay on top and win the favors required to excel. A romantic gesture will impress a loved one.

Leo You'll be tempted to meddle. Don't let anyone drag you into a no-win situation. Keep your distance and focus on making personal changes. Your job will be affected if you take sides.

Virgo Show some confidence and lay out your plans. You will impress the people you encounter if you get involved in educational pursuits or functions related to your work.

Libra Look for a way to bring about change without upsetting too many people. You'll be ripe for pursuits that require travel, discipline and learning. Do what's best for you.

Scorpio The level of your accomplishment will depend on how willing you are to follow your dreams. Don't be afraid to do things differently. It's your unique ideas that will take you furthest.

Sagittarius You won't get a unanimous vote of approval, no matter what you do. Be wary of the person too eager to help or offering something that sounds too good to be true.

Capricorn You've got everything you need at your fingertips, so don't hesitate to make your move. Take the initiative to bring about domestic and financial changes.

Aquarius You'll face opposition if you are too vocal regarding your plans. Bring about change quietly and do your due diligence when it comes to money matters and professional gains.

Pisces You'll gain support if you rely on people you've worked with in the past. If you stick to information that has been tested or proven to work, you'll avoid criticism. EUGENIA LAST
